Tribune study: Chicago red light cameras provide few safety benefits

Chicago Tribune

Chicago's red light cameras fail to deliver the dramatic safety benefits long claimed by City Hall, according to a first-ever scientific study that found the nation's largest camera program is responsible for increasing some types of injury crashes while decreasing others.

The state-of-the-art study commissioned by the Tribune concluded the cameras do not reduce injury-related crashes overall—undercutting Mayor Emanuel's primary defense of a program beset by mismanagement, malfunction and a $2 million bribery scandal.

Emanuel has credited the cameras for a 47 percent reduction in dangerous right-angle, or "T-bone," crashes. But the Tribune study, which accounted for declining accident rates in recent years as well as other confounding factors, found cameras reduced right-angle crashes that caused injuries by just 15 percent.

At the same time, the study calculated a corresponding 22 percent increase in rear-end crashes that caused injuries, illustrating a trade-off between the cameras' costs and benefits.

The researchers also determined there is no safety benefit from cameras installed at intersections where there have been few crashes with injuries. Such accidents actually increased at those intersections after cameras went in, the study found, though the small number of crashes makes it difficult to determine whether the cameras were to blame.

The finding raises questions about why the city installed cameras in so many places where injury-causing crashes were rare—nearly 40 percent of the 190 intersections that had cameras through 2012, the Tribune found.

"The biggest takeaway is that overall [the program] seems to have had little effect," said Dominique Lord, an associate professor at Texas A&M University's Zachry Department of Civil Engineering who led the Tribune's study.

"So the question now is: If we eliminate a certain type of collision and increase the other and overall it stays the same, is there an argument that it is fair to go with the program?" Lord said.

Emanuel declined interview requests. His top transportation experts acknowledged flaws in the city's statistics but said the Tribune study reinforces their own conclusion that cameras are helping.

Chicago Transportation Commissioner Rebekah Scheinfeld said the city has never attempted a deep examination of the effectiveness of the program, which has grown to more than 350 red light cameras and raised more than $500 million in $100 tickets since 2002. She said the Emanuel administration is attempting to fix a long-standing lack of oversight.

"So certainly, the study presents an interesting argument, something that we will be considering moving forward," Scheinfeld said. "But the fact is, the important thing I want to make sure that we get across here is that there are less deaths out there, there are less injuries out there and we are very encouraged by that."

But a half-dozen traffic engineering experts interviewed by the Tribune all agree that simple before-and-after comparison is not an effective measure. It doesn't account for changes in traffic flow because of the economic recession, or the improved safety of automobiles or any number of factors that have brought down crash numbers throughout the nation.

Ald. Anthony Beale (9th), chairman of the Transportation Committee, said the city's numbers come as no surprise: "Those numbers the city uses have never made any sense. Of course they are skewing the numbers."

"That program needs to be stopped. It needs to be frozen to give us time to re-evaluate everything," Beale said. "This is just more proof that this entire program is strictly to generate revenue and always has been."

Mayoral hopefuls: Suspend program

Chicago Tribune

Chicago mayoral challengers Jesus "Chuy" Garcia and Ald. Bob Fioretti (2nd) are calling for an immediate suspension of the city's red-light camera program.

Garcia, a Cook County commissioner running against Mayor Emanuel in the Feb. 24 city election, said Sunday that the city should stop ticketing drivers "until the red light camera can be justified."

"The simple fact is that all the money that was received from the red light tickets made this administration blind to their impact on drivers and residents," Garcia said at a news conference.

In a statement, Fioretti, a city alderman, said the cameras were a result of "fraud."

"You can't balance the budget by giving away the public trust, and that's what the Emanuel administration has done with these cameras," said Fioretti, who plans to hold his own news conference Monday at City Hall. "The proof is right here in front of us that this system doesn't work and has been a burden on Chicagoans, and I will continue to work to lift it by eliminating this program."

Damen Blue Line stop to reopen Monday

GOING PUBLIC

The Damen Blue Line stop in Wicker Park is expected to reopen at 4 a.m. Monday after being closed for two months for renovation, according to the CTA.

Trains had been bypassing the Damen station since it was shut down Oct. 20 for a $13.6 million facelift. When riders return, they should see more turnstiles, better lights, new floors and more room in the station entryway, according to the transit agency. Nearby businesses said they also will appreciate the reopening of the station and the foot traffic it brings. Various businesses will be offering deals this week to lure back commuters.

City Soles, an Italian shoe store, is giving 20 percent off full-price merchandise to anyone showing a Ventra card from now until Dec. 31. La Colombe, a coffee shop, said it will offer free drip coffee Monday through Dec. 28.

Stan's Donuts is giving away one free glazed donut and a free 12-ounce coffee Monday and Tuesday to anyone who shows a Ventra card.

Stan's Donuts general manager Daniel Labriola said business was down 10 to 15 percent during the station closure.

"Unfortunately, the closing of the stop did impact us negatively," Labriola said.

About 7,000 riders typically enter the Damen station on an average weekday, placing it in the top 25 percent of stations with the highest weekday ridership, according to CTA data.

The renovation to the Damen station, which first opened in 1895, was part of a $492 million upgrade of Blue Line track and stations on the North Side. The station did not receive an elevator or escalator because of space constraints, CTA spokesman Brian Steele said.

Now that renovations at the Damen stop and the California Blue Line stop in Logan Square are done, the next phase of the Blue Line program will focus on improving the Addison, Irving Park, Montrose, Harlem and Cumberland stops starting next year.

OUTDOOR WORKERS GIVE TIPS ON BRAVING THE CHICAGO COLD

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Adrianna Hampton
Age: 20 // Lives in: Rogers Park

Occupation: On-the-sidewalk fundraiser for Children International Favorite clothing to keep warm: Fingerless hand-warmers, so that she can still use a pen; fleece-lined leggings
Other advice on keeping warm: Dress in layers. "I wear leggings with fleece, then I put another pair of leggings over that and then my jeans," Hampton said. "Layering definitely helps."
Recent dropped ball: "My feet are killing me. I think I need another pair of socks."

Wendall Scott
Age: 57 // Lives in: Edgewater

Occupation: United States Postal Service letter carrier
Favorite clothing to keep warm: A fleece-lined hat. "I'm a bald eagle. I can get by without gloves, but not without a hat."
Other advice on keeping warm: Smile and keep a positive attitude. "As long as I'm here to put an extra jacket or sweater on, I'm good," Scott said. "Sometimes people just complain and complain, and get colder and colder. I say, just put on the proper gear and get over it."

By Rachel Cromidas | REDEYE

It's one thing to make a mad dash from the train platform to your office's door during a polar vortex, but surviving winter is not so straightforward for those who earn their livelihood outdoors.

While December has been relatively mild, November saw colder-than-normal weather and meteorologists are predicting that frigid weather will return. So RedEye asked Chicagoans who work outside how they manage —and more specifically, what they wear and tools they use to fend off Old Man Winter.

Positive thinking might be just the base layer in Chicagoans' defense against winter, if the regional projections of an even colder and wetter winter come true. For Wendell Scott, a United States Postal Service letter carrier, wearing a smile helps him through the cold and snow.

"Perspective on things like this can make or break your day, so you have to start out with the right attitude," said Scott, 57, of Edgewater.

Earlier this year the Old Farmer's Almanac, a periodical that publishes weather forecasts, predicted that Chicago and other parts of the country's Lower Lakes region would have a colder than normal winter, and would be particularly cold in late December, January and early February.

Meteorolgists say this winter is expected to be colder than average, similar to last year's winter, which saw nearly a full month of below-freezing days and popularized the meteorological term "polar vortex," which describes a pocket of frigid cold air typically found over the North Pole and earned Chicago the nickname "Chiberia"

With Sunday marking the start of the hemisphere's astronomical winter, let the advice of these winter warriors help you prepare.

Lo Grayson
Age: 43 // Lives in: Irving Park

Occupation: Bouncer and general manager of the Shrine, a dance club
Favorite clothing/equipment to keep warm: A duffel bag, so he can pack for all types of cold weather. "Chicago's the only place I've ever lived where you can have four seasons in one day—rain that turns into some ice that turns into some snow," Grayson said. "I have to carry a little duffel bag that has different articles of clothing so I can be prepared."
Other advice on keeping warm: Wear good shoes and cover your head. "Heat escapes the feet and head quicker than it escapes the hands, so warm socks and comfortable shoes, snow parkas and hoodies all come in handy," he said.

Chibernation time

HOW MUCH WOULD IT COST TO NEVER LEAVE HOME ALL WINTER?

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

"Screw this, I'm not coming out of my apartment until April."

We've all said it, but this season, Jamie actually is going to do it. Who is Jamie? Well, she's not real. She's just any one of us in Chicago who ever threatened winter-time hibernation.

This year, Jamie will be holing up alone in the warmth of her apartment from Dec. 1 to March 31. And who can blame her? The same period last year was the coldest four months in recorded Chicago history, according to the National Weather Service.

Jamie will do her grocery shopping, booze runs, laundry and any other task that requires even a single step outside through online delivery services and house calls.

So we did the math: What would it cost Jamie to Chibernate for the winter? MSWASKO@TRIBUNE.COM | @SWASKO

HEALTHY GROCERIES

Jamie watches what she eats. Nutritionist Hannah Al-Amin, owner of Nutrition that Fits in the Near West Side, developed a menu of three balanced meals and snacks for her. A balanced meal consists of a whole grain, a protein and a fruit or vegetable, she said. The shopping list would cost $127.40, tax, delivery fee and $5 tip included, every two weeks with grocery delivery by Peapod.

Total four-month cost:
$1,082.90

THE BOOZE

For four months, the friendly guy at the liquor store is going to wonder where Jamie has gone. Instead of buying two six-packs of beer per week from the neighborhood bodega, she'll use Chicago-based DrinkFly—an online alcohol delivery service. Jamie's two sixers of Lagunitas Little Sumpin' Sumpin' ale ($12.99) and Sam Adams Boston lager ($9.49) will cost her about $36.43 per week after tax, delivery fees and a 20 percent tip.

Total four-month cost:

SPLURGING FOR DELIVERY

Like most of us, Jamie doesn't cook every night. So two nights per week, she'll use GrubHub to take care of dinner.

Once a week, she'll order a medium cheeseburger pizza ($17.99) and a small order of cheesy breadsticks with marinara sauce ($6.99) from Sarpino's. Let's be honest, those places are cheap and, with three locations in the Loop alone, they've got a large delivery area. With tax, delivery fees and 20 percent tip, Jamie will drop $37.91 weekly to get her pizza fix.

Four-month cost: $644.44

Another night, she's ordering from Hana Restaurant—the top-rated pan-Asian restaurant with delivery to the Loop. Jamie faces the dreaded $20 minimum, so she'll order a General Tao's Chicken ($9.95), six potstickers ($5.95) and six crab rangoons ($5.50). After delivery fees, tax and 20 percent tip, Jamie will shell out $35.26 weekly.

Four-month cost: $599.35

Total four-month cost:
$1,243.79

LAUNDRY

Jamie doesn't have in-unit laundry. Really, who does? Instead she'll use Washio—an online laundry pickup and delivery service—to do the dirty work. Washio charges $27.99 for 15-pounds of wash-and-fold laundry with delivery, which, according to the company, should last one person two weeks.

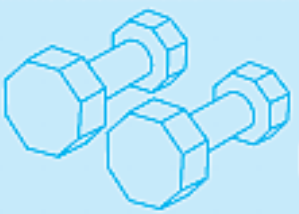

Total four-month cost:
$237.92

BINGE WATCHING

To keep busy, Jamie is going to binge watch television. Like, a lot of TV. She'll pay for a $7.99 per month Netflix subscription.

Total four-month cost:
$31.96 (tax included)

STAYING FIT

Since Jamie isn't going outside the apartment's four walls and her apartment building doesn't have a gym, she's paying for 24 sessions with an in-home personal trainer from Prestige Personal Fitness of Chicago.

Total cost (for 24 sessions):
$1,440

JAMIE WILL BE HOLED UP IN HER APARTMENT FOR 121 TOTAL DAYS.

That's 17 weeks, or four months. And she covered all her basic necessities. Chibernating will cost Jamie a grand total of $4,655.88. That's $273.88 per week.

NOTE: PRICES ARE SPECIFIC TO STORES AND/OR WEBSITES AND ARE SUBJECT TO CHANGE.

'The kids are the world'

Hundreds honor teen killed in S. Side robbery

Mourners who packed a South Side church Saturday morning to remember Demario Bailey were urged to look after each other.

Demario's mother and grandmother exhorted the crowd gathered at the slain 15-year-old's funeral with a simple but passionate plea: Love your children.

"Just love your babies," said Demario's mother, Delores Bailey Fitzpatrick, drawing applause. "They are the world. Y'all want to change the world? The kids are the world. It starts with them."

Demario and his twin brother, Demacio, were attacked after they got off a bus at 63rd and State streets the afternoon of Dec. 13 on the way to Demacio's basketball practice. Four robbers approached them and started rifling through their pockets, police said.

Demario pushed one of the robbers off his brother and was shot in the chest, according to police.

Four teens—three 17-year-olds and a 16-year-old—have been charged with murder.

Friends and family who were invited to speak during the ceremony shared memories of Demario, nicknamed "Issy," who at 6-foot-5 sometimes teased his shorter family members. He was remembered for often cracking jokes, but also lending emotional support to classmates when needed and always being "cordial" with girls.

Mayor Emanuel and Diana Rauner, Gov.-elect Bruce Rauner's wife, also spoke at the two-hour-long service.

EXPRESS LINES

» More than two dozen people were injured Saturday when a commercial passenger bus traveling to Atlanta from Chicago crashed in Indiana, officials said.

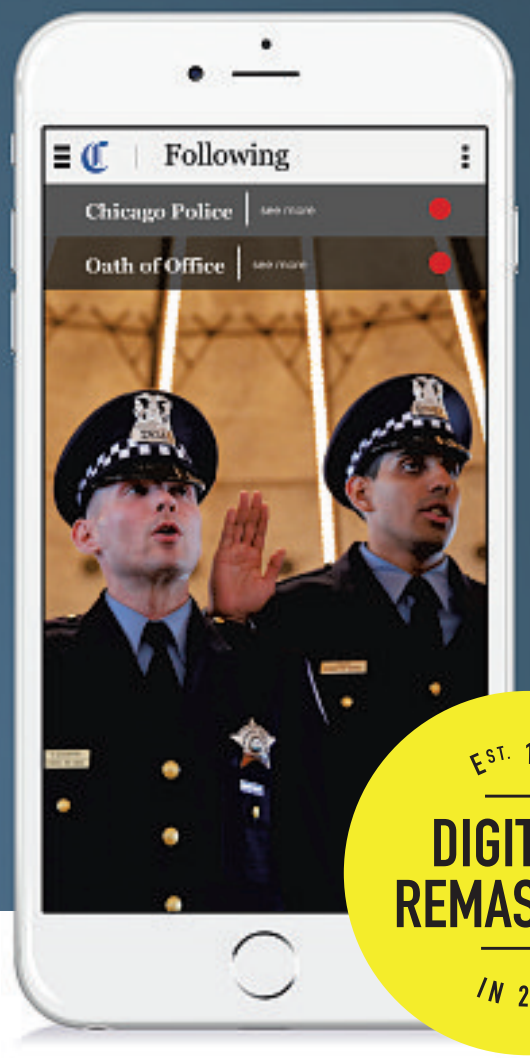

» Mayor Emanuel's 17-year-old son, Zach, was robbed near the family's Ravenswood home Friday night, according to a mayoral spokeswoman and police reports.

» Jurors in Illinois will get a bump in pay under a measure Gov. Quinn signed into law Friday. The law will make jury pay $25 for the first day of service and $50 for each additional day, and takes effect June 1.

Pressure on N.Y. mayor after slaying of 2 cops

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio faced the biggest crisis of his political career Sunday after a gunman killed two police officers in an attack intended to avenge recent police killings of unarmed black men in the U.S. Rafael Ramos, 40, was killed alongside his police partner, 32-year-old Wenjian Liu.

New York police officers turned their backs on De Blasio in protest and their union said the mayor had blood on his hands after Saturday's shooting, which police said was the work of a 28-year-old black man who may have had past mental troubles and who warned of his intentions on social media.

The gunman's Instagram posts indicated he had been motivated by the deaths of Michael Brown and Eric Garner at the hands of police officers.

De Blasio, elected last year on promise to advance civil rights after two decades of tough policing helped New York shed its reputation for violent crime, was sympathetic to the protesters who poured into New York's streets after a grand jury declined earlier this month to indict the officer who killed Garner in a chokehold in July as he resisted arrest.

The mayor's stance has led to sometimes tense relations with the city's largest police union. Police critics view the mayor as not supportive enough at a time of public anger.

Protesters swarm Mall of America

More than 1,500 protesters against police violence shut down part of the Mall of America in Minnesota on Saturday, resulting in about 25 arrests during the final weekend before Christmas, officials said. At another action on Saturday at the King of Prussia Mall in Pennsylvania, protesters staged a "die-in."

Obama renews vow to close Guantanamo

President Obama said in a TV interview set for broadcast Sunday that he will do "everything I can" to close the U.S. military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, after four Afghan detainees were sent home. He first promised to shut the internationally condemned prison when he took office nearly six years ago, but he has been unable to do so.

Bird flu halts U.S. poultry to South Korea

South Korea has suspended imports of U.S. poultry and poultry products because of an outbreak of bird flu in the U.S., the Agriculture Ministry said in a statement Sunday. The suspension comes as South Korea is struggling to contain its own outbreak of bird flu in birds. The ministry said 18 countries had been hit by the HPAI virus this year.

Mom charged in deaths of 8 children

An Australian mother has been charged with the murder of eight children, seven of them hers, after their bodies were found in a home in the city of Cairns. The deaths of the children, whose bodies were discovered on Friday, shocked a nation already reeling from the siege and killing of two hostages at a cafe in Sydney earlier in the week.

OK, NOW WHAT?

Cutler. Clausen. Doesn't seem to matter who's at quarterback for Bears

RedEye

As a fan, you want your team to be confident. So you want to believe the Bears when they told the NFL Network's Michael Silver they believed new starting quarterback Jimmy Clausen would "light it up" against Detroit.

Eh, not quite. The Bears were competitive, which they often have not been with Jay Cutler under the center, but the result was the same. A 20-14 loss in this case.

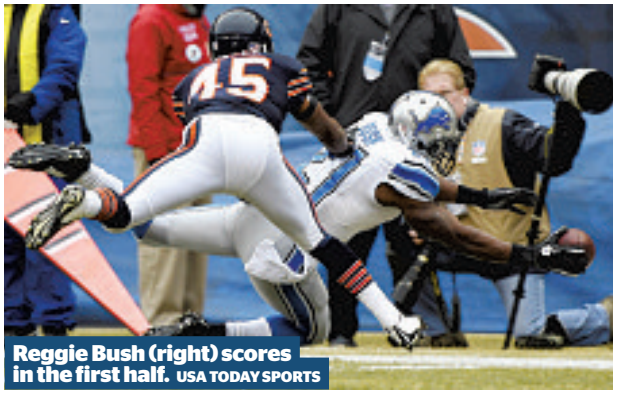

Let's see who did the lighting up in Sunday's game.

Kyle Fuller

The Bears cornerback shoved teammate Ryan Mundy, apparently in disgust, after a play that seemed to result in coverage confusion. He even had some choice words for his brother, Detroit receiver Corey Fuller, after the Bears intercepted Lions QB Matthew Stafford.

Bears fans

They booed after the home team's first three-and-out. They booed on the second three-and-out. They booed after Kyle Fuller was called for pass interference. They booed after Matt Forte failed to get a first down on third-and-2. They booed ... you get the idea.

Reggie Bush (right) scores in the first half. USA TODAY SPORTS

Detroit running backs

First Reggie Bush made a circus catch to convert on fourth-and-5, then broke a tackle and dove into the end zone to put the Lions up 7-0. Later, Joique Bell broke about 20 tackles and scored to put the Lions ahead 17-14. You could call it bad tackling, too.

Bears defense

We never thought we'd be writing this until at least 2015, but this unit was solid for the most part: four sacks, two interceptions and a blocked field goal. Not bad for a team that lost Willie Young and his 10 sacks to an injury during this game.

AS FOR JIMMY CLAUSEN ...

Cutler's replacement performed like you would expect a backup to play. Lots of short passes, no boneheaded decisions, but nothing that made you go, "Wow!" Though if it weren't for a flurry of drops by Bears receivers, Marc Trestman would be saying "I told you so" right about now.

1	What did Jay Cutler do after Sunday's game?	Counted his stacks of money and slept with his beautiful wife.	Failed to "get into the game" even at home with his wife Kristin, if ya know what I mean.	Cleaned out his locker. Buh-Bye, buddy. Don't forget the bad attitude pout face in the top of your locker!	He went shopping with Kristin Cavallari ... for a new job.	Addressing Christmas cards to the Tennessee Titans' front office.
2	Now that college bowl season is under way, how is your life different?	The college football games I'm not watching are slightly more meaningful.	I've been standing on a lot of tables in the middle of campus and screaming inappropriate memes.	When you're planning things around the RAYCOM MEDIA CAMELLIA BOWL, you're in for a locoooong few weeks!	No different. My Ohio State friends are still as delusional as Cubs fans.	Has somebody beaten Florida State yet? No? Then it's still the same.
3	What has been the most underrated move a Chicago team has made lately?	The Blackhawks' totally radical Toews All-Star video cannot be hyped enough.	Picking up Johnny Domanico's minor league contract. The kid needs and deserves your attention and respect.	Re-upping Bears equipment manager Tony Medlin to a multi-year deal. Great move.	By failing to field a decent QB, the Bears will soon have an all-time punt leader in Pat O'Donnell.	I hear that the Bears are protecting themselves from North Korean hackers and changing all their passwords.
4	Getting a hole-in-one at age 103 is like...	... getting out of bed at 103. Any achievement at all is impressive.	... a Chicago quarterback throwing a pass to someone actually wearing a Bears jersey: unlikely.	... making out with a chick at the age of 102! Unexpected, but something you really, really wanted!	... like an NHL player having all their teeth at age 30.	... something Kim Jong Il said he did.
5	Any last-minute shopping suggestions for Chicago sports fans?	All of the awesome T-shirts, hats & more at theheckler-store.com.	Searching "self help books" on amazon.com isn't difficult. I'd start there.	A Jon Lester basket, filled with many wins, a Cy Young Award and a 2016 World Series Ring.	Jay Cutler No. 6 jerseys 90 percent off. Make great litter box liners!	You are all welcome to buy me Blackhawks tickets. Or a Rockford Ice Hogs jersey. Merry Christmas!

Sky's Quigley soars to Stud of the Year—while Cutler lands with thud

RedEye

While many Chicago fans were wringing their hands over Wrigley Field renovations or trying to dissect the White Sox's bullpen problems, the Sky were busy reaching the WNBA Finals for the first time in franchise history.

Then again, someone certainly noticed, as Sky guard and WNBA Sixth Woman of the Year Allie Quigley was voted Chicago Sports Stud of the Year by RedEye readers.

Quigley, who averaged a career-high 11.2 points per game in the regular season and 14.2 in the postseason, garnered a whopping 56 percent of the vote. She beat out the Jackie Robinson West Little League team, which had 15 percent.

She's not exactly resting in the offseason, either. The Chicago-area native and DePaul graduate averages 16.1 points, 4.1 rebounds and 2.9 assists for first-place TS Wisla in Poland.

Meanwhile, Bears QB Jay Cutler was voted Dud of the Year for 2014. That was bound to happen, seeing as he leads the NFL in turnovers and was benched in favor of Jimmy Clausen. In addition to his 18 interceptions and six fumbles lost, he had 67 percent of the vote.

What's more, clearly Chicago fans are fed up with the underachieving Bears. The team accounted for 87 percent of the Dud vote; the Bears defense had 20 percent and Lamarr Houston and his torn ACL had 11 percent.

Congrats to the Studs nominees on a hell of a year. As for the Duds, well, there's always 2015.

More young adults now face poverty

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

New data from the U.S. Census Bureau paint a grim picture for the Millennial generation: The recession squeezed them so hard that one in five people aged 18-34 lives in poverty, compared with just one in seven from that age group in 1980.

That's 13.5 million Millennials living in poverty today compared with 8.4 million young adults nearly 35 years ago.

And there are fewer people in that age group relative to the population now, meaning poverty affects young people in higher proportions than it did 30 years ago.

"I think the economy not creating jobs for this age group is responsible for it [more] than anything," said Dan Lesser, director of economic justice at the Chicago-based Sargent Shriver National Center on Poverty Law.

Lesser's hunch may be correct. A smaller percentage of young adults in that age group are employed now than in 1980 (65 percent compared with 69 percent), even though many more have a college degree (22 percent now compared with just 16 percent in 1980).

"My group of friends all have kids graduating from college the past few years," Lesser said. "They're just not finding jobs, it's as simple as that. Young people [for whom] it would have been easy to get jobs in the past coming out of a four-year college are not finding jobs."

In addition, jobs are scarcer now for those with only a high school diploma; Lesser also pointed out that people are retiring later, leaving less room for those on the lower rungs of the job ladder.

Because of those dismal economic prospects, many Millennials are living with their parents—which in turn can skew the poverty findings, since poverty generally is measured by household rather than by individual.

The Census found that 43.7 percent of the 25- to 34-year-olds living with their parents in 2014 would be under the poverty line if they were living on their own—a figure Lesser called "startling."

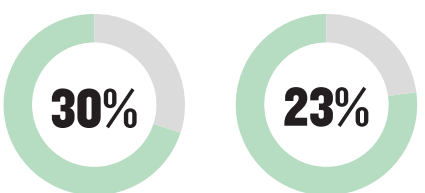

A household of one would have to make $11,490 per year or less in 2014 to qualify as impoverished. That figure does not necessarily reflect non-wage benefits, such as food stamps.

Millennials in poverty, by the numbers

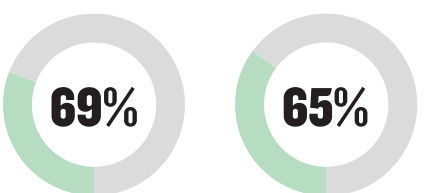

The Census Bureau's American Community Survey statistics released this month compared today's 18- to 34-year-olds (the Millennials) with the same age group in 1980. Spoiler alert: Modern young people do not fare well. RedEye breaks down the numbers.

HOROSCOPES

TAROT.COM

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You might feel helpless if you can't control your emotions. You'll feel relieved as soon as you express what's in your heart. There may be no immediate resolution, but at least everyone will know where you stand.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The more you attempt to gain mastery over your daily life now, the harder it is to keep everything together. It could take time to see how much progress you have made. Wait for the dust to settle before making any major changes.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Financial issues may be complicated today. Matters are confused if your advisers are offering conflicting strategies. You might need to set aside the facts you gathered, stop your endless analysis and simply follow your intuition.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
You may feel overwhelmed by conflicting emotions that have followed you around for the past couple of days. However, your network of friends and family may be the primary source of your concerns now. Postpone the most important decisions while doing what you must to keep everything afloat.

Aries March 21-April 19
You should be ready for a change in direction in order to conserve your resources. Ironically, the more complicated it is to schedule some downtime, the more you need it. Don't make excuses; just make it happen.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You may prefer working alone now, but participating as an integral part of a group may be exactly what you need. Contributing to a community effort is admirable, but it could backfire if you sacrifice your individual goals in the process.

Gemini May 21-June 20
You might have resistance to fulfilling your obligations, but oddly enough you still could have a positive attitude. If you can convince yourself that it's safe to relax, the obstacles to your success will begin to dissipate.

Cancer June 21-July 22
The watery Pisces Moon can be an antidote for your recent sense of alienation in a relationship. Rewards could be yours if you're willing to dig for buried treasure on your own.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
You're excited about raising complex issues that are without fast and easy solutions. However, taking many smaller steps to express your heartfelt desires can lead to profound discussions that intensify an important relationship.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your helpful assistance might be perceived as unsolicited criticism. Don't try to solve other people's problems or change someone who falls short of your expectations. Instead, make adequate room for all the imperfections that you see around you.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You have a long list of things to get done around your home today, but you don't exactly know the best way to start. It's much better to stay flexible and take everything one step at a time. Don't judge yourself if you don't make a lot of progress; you'll catch up in time.

Scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Sharing laughter is a high priority, but you may be stressed out by a long-forgotten family memory. Thankfully, your private matters don't have to interfere with your life today, if you manage your emotions. Staying aware of your feelings now allows you to process them internally.

Who's your daddy?

By Gwendolyn Purdom | REDEYE

Yes, we only really became acquainted with the Kardashian family in the reality TV/momager/Bruce Jenner phase, but we still have a hard time wrapping our head around Ross Geller siring Kourtney, Kim, Khloe and Rob. But that's what Ryan Murphy and the other creators behind "American Crime Story: The People v. O.J. Simpson" have in mind, according to the Hollywood Reporter. David Schwimmer has been tapped to play Robert Kardashian, Kim & Co.'s late father and Simpson's attorney in the upcoming FX anthology series. Which got us thinking—If we were casting other famous figures' fathers, who would get the part? GPURDOM@TRIBUNE.COM | @GWENPURDOM; GETTY IMAGES, MCT, REUTERS PHOTOS

Jaden Smith

TV father to be played by: Tracy Morgan

Sure, no one could play Smith's father better than actual dad Will, but in a hypothetical parallel universe, we could see the resemblance between some of Morgan's best "30 Rock" non sequiturs and the little Smith's endlessly amusing Twitter feed.

Jennifer Lawrence

TV father to be played by: Tom Hanks

Who better to play dad to the charming, Oscar-winning actress everybody wants to hang out with than the charming, Oscar-winning actor everybody wants to hang out with?

Taylor Swift

TV father to be played by: Hugh Jackman

She has yet to grow into his jack-of-all-trades confidence, but their shared penchant for a pepped-up song and dance would make this pairing somewhat believable. Plus, when haters tore "Les Mis" apart, Jackman totally shook it off.

Jimmy Fallon

TV father to be played by: Steve Martin

It wouldn't be much of a stretch to imagine Fallon getting his fun-loving antics from a master like Martin.

SIGHTINGS

Comedian Chris Rock has been all over the place promoting his recently released film "Top Five," including Chicago. Rock met with radio station contest winners while he was here and, it appears, revealed his Chicago pizza allegiance. Here's that sighting and many more. LUIS GOMEZ, TRIBUNE

» Rock visited Gino's East in Streeterville Mon Dec. 10 and tweeted "Landed in Chicago first stop, Gino's East with winners from WKSCFM radio." He then plugged the pizza restaurant to his 3 million Twitter followers, tweeting "My favorite Deep dish!"

» William H. Macy ("Shameless") checked out the David Bowie Is exhibit at the Museum of Contemporary Art Dec. 9. Adrian Grenier ("Entourage") stopped by Dec. 11.

» John Cusack had dinner Monday at Del Frisco's Double Eagle Steakhouse.

» Sophia Bush ordered appetizers Dec. 13 at Bar Toma. Her "Chicago PD" co-star Jon Seda had dinner Dec. 16 at Hugo's Frog Bar & Fish House.

» Director George Lucas ("Star Wars") had lunch Dec. 16 at Mity Nice Bar & Grill.

Pretty sure we haven't thought about Dr. Evil since "Goldmember" dropped in 2002 (though, to be fair, your lame uncle did keep doing the Dr. Evil voice at family gatherings for a good five years afterward), but the bald-headed Austin Powers bad guy returned to the pop-culture-osphere Saturday when Mike Myers opened "SNL" in character. The cameo, of course, centered on Sony's controversial decision to cancel the release of the "The Interview" after a group of reportedly North Korean hackers threatened to harm moviegoers—very Dr. Evil kinda stuff. In the bit, the villain told viewers he thinks fighting over a silly comedy is "pathetic" and he is "furious that North Korea and Sony Pictures have both given evil organizations a bad name."

J.K. ROWLING LOVES 'THRILLER'

As part of her festive 12 days of new Harry Potter stories leading up to Christmas, J.K. Rowling cleared up a few things for all you "Walking Dead" super fans who assume the Inferi that Harry encounters in the "Half-Blood Prince" are actually zombies, Buzzfeed reports: They're NOT. Rowling posted several reasons why she wants to distinguish between the reanimated guardians of the locket Horcrux in the book and your run-of-the-mill living dead, including that they're not a part of British folklore and not wanting to veer from her Horcrux storyline. "Lastly," she wrote on her Pottermore site, "to me, a zombie will always mean Michael Jackson in a bright red bomber jacket."

THE DIGIT

$355.6M The titular ring from "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy may have been Gollum's precious, but it's got nothing on the $355.6 million box office haul its prequel, "The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies," raked in worldwide since its foreign rollout last week, Variety reports. Over the weekend, the film journeyed to No. 1 by adding $105.5 million globally.

"I remember the first day coming into rehearsal. Meryl was like, 'Listen, I want you to know, I got you this [bleeping] part.' "

THE QUOTE

"So when I opened this holiday card a few days ago and read Love @beyonce I literally fell to the floor. I was on the floor of my apartment. I have witnesses. Love the #CakeByThePound sweatshirt. Thanks Bey for the gift. I have had an awesome year and this is certainly a highlight."

—"Orange Is the New Black" actress Laverne Cox, in an Instagram post, thanking Beyonce for her Christmas card and a "Cake by the Pound" sweatshirt. We really must get on Mrs. Carter's nice list.
